"THE FAMILY ROW"
Century 2-Reel Comedy
Starring BUDDY MESSINGER

SEP 17 1924

Buddy and Karr are brother and in love with two sisters, Bartine Burkette and Delores Brinkman. Karr is always being thrown out of the house on account of Buddy making mischief. The two girls come out on the veranda, throw down a flower pot which hits Karr and in the flower is a note stating that Bartine will elope with him. They finally elope and get married. They get to their new home and are very happy. Buddy comes to live with them and then the trouble starts. The husband discovers a gift which has been sent to his wife and after he sees it he visualizes that his wife is not the sweet girl that he married but must be a bowery girl. The wife opens a package which has been sent to the husband and feels the same about him, so when they come down to dinner they are very cold to each other.

The 'phone rings, Buddy tells Karr that the girl in his office wants to talk to him and when Karr answers the 'phone he says "Alright I will be right down and take care of the case." The wife misconstrues the answer and is heartbroken when the husband leaves. Later the wife goes down to the office and as she looks through the door she sees what she thinks to be a girl's arm around her husband. She faints and falls into the arms of a man just as her husband comes out and sees it. There is a little quarrel between them and then the wife leaves. Shortly after, the husband feeling badly over the quarrel they had goes home to make up with his wife - just as he comes near the house he sees a few men go inside the house and he sees them all kiss his wife. When he goes inside he finds a note saying "I'm leaving for a better place." He is frantic and goes out ready to make trouble when he finds that all the mixup was framed by Buddy.
